It was released in 2004. The film shows the last 24 hours of Jesus of Nazareth (called his followers of Jesus Christ), as stated in the Gospel of accounts contained in the New Testament that Christians consider part of the Bible. Christ's passion was unusual and contradictory for many reasons. The whole speech was in three languages spoken during the time of Jesus: Latin, Greek and Hebrew. The film spent a lot of time showing details of the suffering and death of Jesus, with many violent scenes. Mel Gibson said it was a realistic display of what happened, although others thought he showed too much violence. Jewish groups and Christians objected to the film because it showed Jewish leaders organizing for Jesus to kill. There were other images in the film of Jews that many Jews and Christians considered controversial. They said it was making people think that modern Jews are guilty because of this and increasing anti-Semitism and inaccurate beliefs of Jews. The filmmakers stated that this was not their intention, but criticism on both sides continued and continues to this day. Mel Gibson was unable to get support from film studios for this film, and so put the money on it (about $25 million) mostly himself. The film made a lot more money, Than expected - about $370 million Other websites Passion of Christ on IMDb extracted from Christ's Passion broke several records when it came out thirteen years ago: to this day, it's the highest-grossing religious film of all time, the highest-grossing R-rated film in North America, and - because Mel Gibson insisted on keeping all dialogues in Aramaic or Latin - it's also the highest-grossing film in which all the dialogue is spoken. At the time it was widely reported that Gibson was so committed to these ancient languages - and keep us focused on the visual and visceral experience of Christ's suffering - that he was thinking about releasing the film without subtitles. But in the end he relented -- with one considerable exception, namely in which Jewish leaders say that the blood of Jesus will be on their heads and on the heads of their children, a la Matthew 27:25. Because this verse is often cited to justify anti-Semitism, and because many people have accused Gibson and his film of anti-Semitism, Gibson decided to let this line go untranslatable. Now comes word that a new version of Passion is coming to Blu-ray on Tuesday - and this time, in addition to the audio comments that came with earlier editions of the film, it will also have English, Spanish and Portuguese audio dubs. A few quick questions come to mind: First, does Mel Gibson himself control the dubbing of these films at all? Secondly, did the original actors participate in these dabah? If so, are these new sn to, or have they sat on the shelf for thirteen years? And third, what will happen to Matthew's 27:25 scene? In the subtitle of the film it was possible to hide this verse and its anti-Semitic overtones, simply by refusing to translate it; for the average viewer, who did not know Aramaic, the crowd shouted nothing special. But now that the whole dialogue is duplicated in English (both Spanish and Portuguese), will this line be called clearly too? I think we'll find out when Blu-ray comes out on Tuesday.
